Q.2. Read the following paragraph and answer the questions given at the end: 3+3+3+3+3=15

It is usual to speak of courage as of two kinds: physical courage and moral courage. The distinction is quite sound; for a man can have one without the other. By physical courage, we mean the courage to face physical danger such as pain, injury, death, etc. By moral courage we imply courage to face ridicule, hatred, and public disapproval for the sake of what we believe to be right. A soldier, who can face shells and guns, may be unable to face the mockery of his companions. He is physically brave, but a moral coward. On the other hand, who dare to defy public opinion for conscience sake but cannot face bodily torture. They are morally brave, but physically cowards. Moral courage is a test of character. Danger and physical risks test our nerves and strengths only but it requires an exceptional man to overcome temptations and to stay honest when his children are starving. True manliness is of the mind, not of the body. The body suffers for a time and forgets all about it. But the torture and pain of the mind may continue for years. The man, who suffers patiently without complaining because he thinks his is in the right, is truly brave.

Properly speaking, the cave men were the human beings who lived before the most important of the early inventions on which a stable civilization can be based: farming or the regular cultivation of edible plant; the domestication of hooved animals; pottery --- and perhaps with it the revolutionary technique of grinding, polishing, and boring stone tools so as to make them almost as efficient as the later tools of metal. The cave men did not farm, they were hunters and fishermen, and their women collected wild fruit, vegetables, and grain. They lived lives rather like those of the American plains Indians before the introduction of the horse. They did not domesticate animals - or at best only one animal, our oldest friend dog. They lived largely on animals; they thought about animals constantly; but they were hunters, so they treated even the horse as something to be stampeded over a cliff and then eaten. They knew something about clay and how it hardens in the fire, but so far we have found no real clay dishes or containers among their remains. We find it difficult to imagine life without the peaceful cornfields, the quiet cattle, and the dishes from which we eat and drink, yet for most of man's existence on the earth these things were unknown and undreamed of. Settled farming began somewhere about 7000 years ago, in the new Stone Age; that seems like a long time ago, but it is only about 200 generations from our own time.
