Curator's Note:

Initiating in the final half of the 20th century, Fiber Art wall-hangings have had a fascinating historiographical trajectory. Originally these attract little attention, with the prominent exception of being classified. They fall somewhere between fine and applied arts evocatively rising doubts as whether such classification is worthwhile. Women being type casted as the main protagonists of the fiber art movement in 1970's was undoubtedly a relevant factor in its demotion. It may be easy to guess why fiber art has come back into focus. The gender dynamics of the movement, long an obstacle, now forms its own argument for reassessment. Its sheer internationalism, unusual at a times when most art movements were anchored in specific cities and nations, also feels relevant. Then too, there is a broader reappraisal of craft's role in fine art. Contemporary artists have also been making the case for fiber art's legacy, contributions through shows like "Fiber Art Exhibition" at College of Art and Design, University of the Punjab puts the fiber artists on the National map. Viewers are able to see textiles materials applied to different projects exhibiting broad purview, juxtaposing varied textile idioms. As Awareness develops further, the key formations of textile history with other genres formally ghettoized among the crafts will become as familiar as those of painting and sculpture.
