b) Observe the word limit please. Attempt all parts of a question at one place.

Q.1. Attempt any three of the following questions: (15)

- 1- In "The Signalman" describe how does the narrator feel about external world?
- 2- In "The Fly in the Ointment", the son feels marginalized in front of father. Do you agree?
- 3- "The Prison" is a metaphor for confinement in our social roles? Discuss.
- 4- Discuss the significance of mirror in "Lady in the Looking Glass".
- 5- Discuss the use of language in "The Enemy".

Q.2. Make a Precis of the following paragraph. (Mere copying the paragraph would not fetch good marks. Use your own language). (10)

Stress is a problem that can have detrimental effects on many people's lives, and there are various factors in modern society responsible for this. However, there are ways to limit the potential impacts.

The modern world we live in today presents us with many issues that we did not have to cope with in the past. Firstly, there are issues of terrorism that we are constantly confronted with in the media. Whether these are real or not, we are led to believe our lives are in constant danger, be it flying on a plane or travelling on public transport. Climate change is another worry that everyone has to face. The results of a significant rise in temperatures could radically affect our ways of life, and our children's too. There are also more health issues to be concerned about than in the past, with rises in Alzheimer's, diabetes, and stroke to name but a few. All of these concerns can result in stress.

Tackling such problems will not be easy, but there are measures that can be taken. Governments and the media could play their part by ensuring that instead of persistently bombarding us with such negative images and information about the world in which we live, we are given more positive stories too. However, given this is unlikely to happen, we need to develop our own strategies to distract us from these influences. Of course exercising regularly is one thing we should do as this has been shown to increase endorphin levels and lead to feelings of happiness. Sleeping enough helps us to recuperate and restore our body. Finally, eating properly can improve our health and result in less worry about potential diseases.

All in all, although there are many factors around us today which lead to stress, we can take steps to reduce it. Given that the strains we face in modern society will likely get worse, ignoring it is not an option for many people.

Q.3. Change the narration of any five of the followings. (5)

- 1- Mr Qasim said, "I am not happy with the performance of my staff members".
- 2- Mohsin said, "Life is becoming difficult with every passing day".
- 3- The teacher said to me, "I should not spend a lot of time in the virtual world".
- 4- She said to me "My brother will be leaving for America next year for higher studies".
- 5- The teacher said to the students, "The earth revolves around the sun".
- 6- He asked to me "Have you finished reading the book".
- 7- She said, "Don't you dare touch my things on the table".

Q2. Make a précis of the following in your own English. (10)
(Credit will be given to your own words, not just copying from the question paper.)

It is physically impossible for a well-educated or brave man to make money the chief object of his thoughts, just as it is for him to make his dinner the principal object of them. All healthy people like making money ___ ought to like it and enjoy the sensation of winning it; it is something better than money. A good soldier, for instance, mainly wishes to do his fighting well. He is glad of his pay ___ very properly so, and justly grumbles when you keep him ten years without it ___ still his main notion of life is to win battles, not to be paid for winning them. So of clergyman's object is essentially baptize and preach not to be paid for preaching. So of doctors. They like fees no doubt, -- out to like them; yet if they are brave and well-educated, the entire object of their lives is a not fee. They, on the whole, desire to cure the sick, and if they are good doctors, and the choice were fairly put to them, would rather cure their patient and lose their fee than kill him and get it. And so with all the other brave and rightly trained men; their work is first, their fee second ___ very important always, but still second.

Q2. Make a précis of the following in your own English. (Credit will be given to your own words, not just copying from the question paper) (10)

The directionless educational system of the Third World, in general, and Pakistan in particular is also aggravating the problem of unemployment. In its original sense, education should be aimed at training the people to meet their needs by exploiting the available resources in a better and most economical way. But in Pakistan the educational system has miserably failed to produce manpower that could be gainfully absorbed in its economy. It seems that our economic and educational system belong to two different worlds. The inefficiency of our government is not to formulate a just and balanced labor policy is also another cause of unemployment in Pakistan. Due to the lack of a proper labor policy employers give unjust wages to the labor which results in improper contribution of the workforce to the economic activity of the country. At present, the developed countries are also not in mood to support the sluggish economy of Pakistan. During oil boom of the 70s, 30 % of our unemployed labor force went to the Middle East countries. This large-scale emigration not only reduced the pressure of unemployment in our country but also brought in a huge amount of foreign exchange to our staggering economy.

Unemployment is more than an economic problem. An unemployed person loses his confidence and hope. He becomes a frustrated member of the society. The natural outcome of this frustration is destruction. Sometimes this frustration targets his own personality and he becomes a drug addict and sometimes it manifests itself in the form of anti-social feelings and he begins to create law and order problems.

Q.2. Make a Precis of the following paragraph. (Mere copying the paragraph would not fetch good marks. Use your own language). (10)

Science offers the possibility of far greater wellbeing for the human race than has ever been known before. It offers this on certain conditions: abolition of war, even distribution of ultimate power, and limitation of the growth of population. All these are much nearer to bring possible than they were ever before. In western industrial countries as they become modernized, this thing can become a reality if power is not usurped by dictators and missionaries. If the world population keeps on growing at its present pace, the equal distribution of wealth would be impossible. The prevention of wars? Unfortunately in present times, countries are fighting to stop wars, a paradox in itself. The humanity has to cover a long and arduous journey to reach the destination of human happiness. Till then, we can only struggle for a glorious future. (140 words)

"Philosophy" is a word which has been used in many ways, some wider, some narrower. I propose to use it in a very wide sense, which I will now try to explain. It is something intermediate between theology and science. All definite knowledge--so I should contend--belongs to science; all dogma as to what surpasses definite knowledge belongs to theology. But between theology and science there is a No Man's Land, exposed to attack from both sides; this No Man's Land is philosophy. Almost all the questions of most interest to speculative minds are such as science cannot answer, and the confident answers of theologians no longer seem so convincing as they did in former centuries. Is the world divided into mind and matter, and, if so, what is mind and what is matter? Is mind subject to matter, or is it possessed of independent powers? Has the universe any unity or purpose? Is it evolving towards some goal? Is there such a thing as wisdom, or is what seems such merely the ultimate refinement of folly? To such questions no answer can be found in the laboratory. Theologies have professed to give answers, all too definite; but their very definiteness causes modern minds to view them with suspicion. The studying of these questions, if not the answering of them, is the business of philosophy.

Throughout this long development, from 600 B.C. to the present day, philosophers have been divided into those who wished to tighten social bonds and those who wished to relax them. With this difference others have been associated. The disciplinarians have advocated some system. Of dogma, either old or new, and have therefore been compelled to be, in a greater or less degree, hostile to science, since their dogmas could not be proved empirically. They have almost invariably taught that happiness is not the good, but that "nobility" or "heroism" is to be preferred. They have had a sympathy with the irrational parts of human nature, since they have felt reason to be inimical to social cohesion. The libertarians, on the other hand, with the exception of the extreme anarchists, have tended to be scientific, utilitarian, rationalistic, hostile to violent passion, and enemies of all the more profound forms of religion. This conflict existed in Greece before the rise of what we recognize as philosophy, and is already quite explicit in the earliest Greek thought. In changing forms, it has persisted down to the present day, and no doubt will persist for many ages to come.

It is clear that each party to this dispute--as to all that persist through long periods of time—is partly right and partly wrong. Social cohesion is a necessity, and mankind has never yet succeeded in enforcing cohesion by merely rational arguments. Every community is exposed to two opposite dangers: ossification through too much discipline and reverence for tradition, on the one hand; on the other hand, dissolution, or subjection to foreign conquest, through the growth of an individualism and personal independence that makes co-operation impossible. In general, important civilizations start with a rigid and superstitious system, gradually relaxed, and leading, at a certain stage, to a period of brilliant genius, while the good of the old tradition remains and the evil inherent in its dissolution has not yet developed. But as the evil unfolds, it leads to anarchy, thence, inevitably, to a new tyranny, producing a new synthesis secured by a new system of dogma. The doctrine of liberalism is an attempt to escape from this endless oscillation. The essence of liberalism is an attempt to secure a social order not based on irrational dogma, and insuring stability without involving more restraints than are necessary for the preservation of the community. Whether this attempt can succeed only the future can determine.

In the economic sphere there are many widespread superstitions. Why do people value gold and precious stones? Not simply because of their rarity: there are a number of elements called "rare earths" which are much rarer than gold, but no one will give a penny for them except a few men of science. There is a theory, for which there is much to be said, that gold and gems were valued originally on account of their supposed magical properties. The mistakes of governments in modern times seem to show that this belief still exists among the sort of men who are called "practical." At the end of the last war, it was agreed that Germany should pay vast sums to England and France, and they in turn should pay vast sums to the United States. Everyone wanted to be paid in money rather than goods; the "practical" men failed to notice that there is not that amount of money in the world. They also failed to notice that money is no use unless it is used to buy goods. As they would not use it in this way, it did no good to anyone. There was supposed to be some mystic virtue about gold that made it worthwhile to dig it up in the Transvaal and put it underground again in bank vaults in America. In the end, of course, the debtor countries had no more money, and, since they were not allowed to pay in goods, they went bankrupt. The Great Depression was the direct result of the surviving belief in the magical properties of gold. It is to be feared that some similar superstition will cause equally bad results after the end of the present war.

In all history, nothing is so surprising or so difficult to account for as the sudden rise of civilization in Greece. Much of what makes civilization had already existed for thousands of years in Egypt and Mesopotamia, and had spread thence to neighboring countries. But certain elements had been lacking until the Greeks supplied them. What they achieved in art and literature is familiar to everybody, but what they did in the purely intellectual realm is even more exceptional. They invented mathematics and science and philosophy; they first wrote history as opposed to mere annals; they speculated freely about the nature of the World and the ends of life, without being bound in the fetters of any inherited orthodoxy. What occurred was so astonishing that, until very recent times, men were content to gape and talk mystically about the Greek genius. It is possible, however, to understand the development of Greece in scientific terms, and it is well worth while to do so. (163 words)

English education and English language have done immense goods to our country, in spite of their glaring drawbacks. The notions of democracy and self-government are the born of English education. Those who fought and died for our freedom were nursed in the cradle of English thought and culture. The West has made contribution to the East. The history of Europe has fired the hearts of our leaders. Our struggle for freedom has been inspired by the struggles for freedom in England, America and France. If our leaders were ignorant of English and if they had not studied this language, how could they have been inspired by these heroic struggles for freedom in other lands? English, therefore, did us great good in the past and if properly studied will do immense good in future. English is spoken throughout the world. For international contact, our commerce and trade, for the development of our practical ideas, for the scientific studies, English is indispensable "English is very rich in literature," our own literature has been made richer by this foreign language. It will really be a fatal day if we altogether forget Shakespeare, Milton, Keats and Shaw. in order to be up to date with modern education and to be an integral part of international community, we must not take learning English Language for granted.

Science offers the possibility of far greater wellbeing for the human race than has ever been known before. It offers this on certain conditions: abolition of war, even distribution of ultimate power, and limitation of the growth of population. All these are much nearer to being possible than they were ever before. In western industrial countries as they become modernized, this thing can become a reality if power is not usurped by dictators and missionaries. If the world population keeps on growing at its present pace, the equal distribution of wealth would be impossible. The prevention of wars? Unfortunately, in present times, countries are fighting to stop wars, a paradox in itself. The humanity has to cover a long and arduous journey to reach the destination of human happiness. Till then, we can only struggle for a glorious future. (140 words)

The psychological causes of unhappiness, it is clear, are many and various. But all have something in common. The typical unhappy man is one who, having been deprived in youth of some normal satisfaction, has come to value this one kind of satisfaction more than any other, and has therefore given to his life a one-sided direction, together with a quite undue emphasis upon the achievement as opposed to the activities connected with it. There is, however, a further development which is very common in the present day. A man may feel so completely thwarted that he seeks no form of satisfaction, but only distraction and oblivion. He then becomes a devotee of 'pleasure'. That is to say he seeks to make life bearable by becoming less alive. Drunkenness, for example, is temporary suicide; the happiness that it brings is merely negative, a momentary cessation of unhappiness. The narcissist and the megalomaniac believe that happiness is possible, though they may adopt mistaken means of achieving it; but the man who seeks intoxication, in whatever form, has given up hope except in oblivion. In his case, the first thing to be done is to persuade him that happiness is desirable. Men who are unhappy, like men who sleep badly, are always proud of the fact. Perhaps their pride is like that of the fox who had lost his tail; if so, the way to cure it is to point out to them how they can grow a new tail. (248 Words)
